

CEREBRAL PURSUIT: the beauty of the brain is the subject of an art project that celebrates MRI scans. Me, Myself and MRI features six people who have been photographed, filmed and interviewed as they underwent MRI scans. These different elements have been combined to celebrate what makes each person unique. The exhibition has been created by Geodesic Arts, which has worked closely with Archbishop Holgate's School in York. Pictured are two pupils from the school taking a closer look at one of the MRI images. The exhibition is at the National Science Learning Centre in York until March 26.
